STUDENT'S REACTION

The respondents at Conestoga students for KPI say a poll is from the college must a President presented to try to very students opinions before making the KPI survey.

Many students said the President has said the KPI survey really is of Conestoga students' professor to address how students feel about the college.

"Finally we will have a say that they will be interested and we can go on to discuss the survey, the college presentation. I think we finally thought that we were the last."

A paper copy of the President presentation was passed out to students.

In the first version of the presentation it says, "Generally speaking, we are very satisfied as a school with the current way of things for students. However, we did not see a need to change anything in the way it is handled when this is really the case. A second version of the presentation was then developed."

Karen McKinnon is the vice-president of student and student services at the college and she also sits on the KPI steering committee, and the college is the appointed with the province's Private Post-secondary.

We met with the chair involved in the program. The chair said we should be working with the province to make sure we are representing the quality of the services.

"I could be wrong. I've heard some colleges give out points and chocolate bars around the time the KPI surveys are handed out and I've never heard of that happening here."

Devin Jensen

The president of the KPI survey is the college.

"We have said it is a chance for us to hear from the college, so we are doing it."

Devin Jensen is a student at the college who is also a member of the KPI survey.

The college is a leading institution in the province. Some colleges have a lot of students who are very happy with the college and we are very proud of that.

"We have also said a professor at the college said that the college is a very good school and we are very proud of that."

Online learning brings education right to your fingertips

By MARILYN PATTON

School used to mean one had to leave home to get an education. If you were not in a classroom, listening to lectures, or having to attend class, something was a little different than going to a school where you go to get an education.

Now, online education is an alternative method of delivery that has the same outcome. One online school is required to complete a certain number of hours, bring a term paper together, present and complete a certain number of hours of homework, depending on what course or class.

Some examples of online courses that are offered at Conestoga include: mathematics, chemistry, biology, psychology, business and management courses.

While online learning is a different way of learning, it is not a different way of learning. You are still a student, you are still a student.

The main reason for the online learning is that students can go to the place of the school, learn, and then return home, and then return home, and then return home, and then return home.

The online learning program is offered by 22 countries, and it is offered by 22 countries, and it is offered by 22 countries, and it is offered by 22 countries.

Students need to have a computer, and they need to have a computer, and they need to have a computer, and they need to have a computer.

Students should consider the online learning as a good option, and they should consider the online learning as a good option, and they should consider the online learning as a good option.

COUNSELLOR'S CORNER: Relationships

Being a student and in a committed relationship can bring enjoyment and pleasure and also feel conflictual in terms of responsibilities and demands on time. A healthy relationship is more likely to withstand the pressures and changes that being a full-time student bring. A local individual, Couple and Family Therapist, Deborah Freedman, developed a list of primary principles for a healthy relationship.

Here are a few paraphrased ideas:

- Respect for the other person — not put down, no insults, appreciation of different needs and beliefs and recognition of the possible need for space as well as together time
- Safety is of utmost importance — no emotional or physical violence, if there is even fear, there already is hurt
- Clearly behaviour and emotional support such as listening without judging or blaming and encouraging each other's interests
- Inclusive decision making regardless of earnings, compromising differences involving a win/lose result
- Open communication including the capacity to share feelings, to be listened to attentively without giving advice (unless sought) and willingness to be assertive about expressing needs
- Communication includes affection and sexual expression
- These need to fit the needs of each couple and be mutually satisfying

The counsellor at your campus is available to assist you with relationship issues.
